Summary
A pottery that manufactured brown earthenware and is alluded to by Welsh bards around three centuries ago. The pottery is also visible on the 1st edition OS map of 1878 (although it is not labelled), the 2nd edition OS map of 1899, the 3rd edition OS map of 1918 and the 4th edition OS map of 1941. Summary
This site has been suggested as the possible location of the 'missing' Roman fort of Bomium. The Antonine Itinerary, which details distances in Roman miles mp (mens pedalis) along roads spanning the Roman Empire, states in Iter XII that Bomium is situated 15 mp from Nidum (Neath) and 27 mp from Isca (Caerleon). The total distances between places described in Iter XII do not add up correctly, and attempts have been made to correct the figures given. While in no way conclusive, these studies have suggested that Bomium is situated somewhere to the west of the Ewenny River, possibly between it and the Ogmere River. The grounds of Glanwenny House are a suitable area and shape for a Roman fort, and the topographical situation is considered to be an appropriately strategic location for such a feature. GGAT Projects undertook a watching-brief during redevelopment of the site in 1983. No archaeological deposits were encountered during this work and it is therefore considered unlikely that this is the location of Bomium. However, the possibility that the fort is situated somewhere nearby cannot be entirely discounted.

02214m/31802	POW Camp (198) Special Camp XI

NGR	Period

Summary

The camp was originally constructed during the late 1930s as a barracks to house women employed at the Bridgend munitions factory. The accommodation was unpopular, however, and the buildings remained unused until 1943, when American troops were housed there. The barracks were converted to a prisoner of war camp shortly after the Normandy Landings in 1944, with accommodation for nearly 200 German and Italian soldiers. During the night of the 10th March 1945, 67 prisoners escaped from Hut 9 (02215m/31803/LB11362). This was the largest escape of German prisoners during World War II, although all were subsequently recaptured. The last of the 1634 prisoners were transferred to Camp 181 in Worksop, Nottinghamshire on the 31st March 1945, after which Island Farm was designated Special Camp XI. The new camp held senior German officers awaiting trial on war crime charges. They included some of Hitler's closest advisers, including Generalfeldmarschalls Rundstedt, Manstein, Kleist and Brauchitsch. The last prisoners left the camp in May 1948, and the camp was officially closed. The remains of the camp were demolished in 1994, with the exception of Hut 9. The remains of the camp's well-fare building exist as a large concrete pad and a series of concrete and brick steps. A number of the prison huts survive as concrete and brick bases, while the concrete paths running between the various buildings are still largely extant. Graded demolition material from the buildings still remains on site.

Summary

A single-storey prefabricated structure, from which 67 German POWs escaped on the night of 10th March 1945, through an 18m long tunnel. The building comprised a central brick-built ablution block and cast concrete accommodation wings. A two-storey brick tower to the rear contained a boiler room, with a water tank above. The escape tunnel was dug from the second room on the south side of Hut 9. The tunnel had been fitted with electric lighting, a ventilation pipe and fan. Additionally, wooden props for the tunnel were constructed from camp furniture. A 'pin-up' of a woman was painted on the wall above the tunnel entrance, in order to distract the attention of the guards (Vincent 1990). The remains of this tunnel can still be seen to the south of the hut (Howell 2000).

Summary

The course of the Vale of Glamorgan Railway crosses the southeast corner of the study area. The railway opened in 1889, as an extension of the Barry-Trehafod Railway, and became amalgamated with the Great Western Railway under the Railways Act of 1921. Local passenger services between Barry and Bridgend ceased on 15th June 1964, and local freight was withdrawn in 1967. The line remains open for freight transport (Barrie 1994, 176-178). The line was re-opened to passenger traffic in June 2005, following a public campaign.

SUMMARY

A building is shown in this location on the 2" OS map of 1836, although the structure is not named. The tithe map of 1840 describes the building as 'barn and yard', and it is not until the 1st ed OS map of 1885 that the building is first referred to as 'Island'. This name continues to be used into the 20th century, and the full name of Island Farm first appears in the 6" OS Provisional edition map of 1948. The farm has since been demolished and new housing built on the site.
